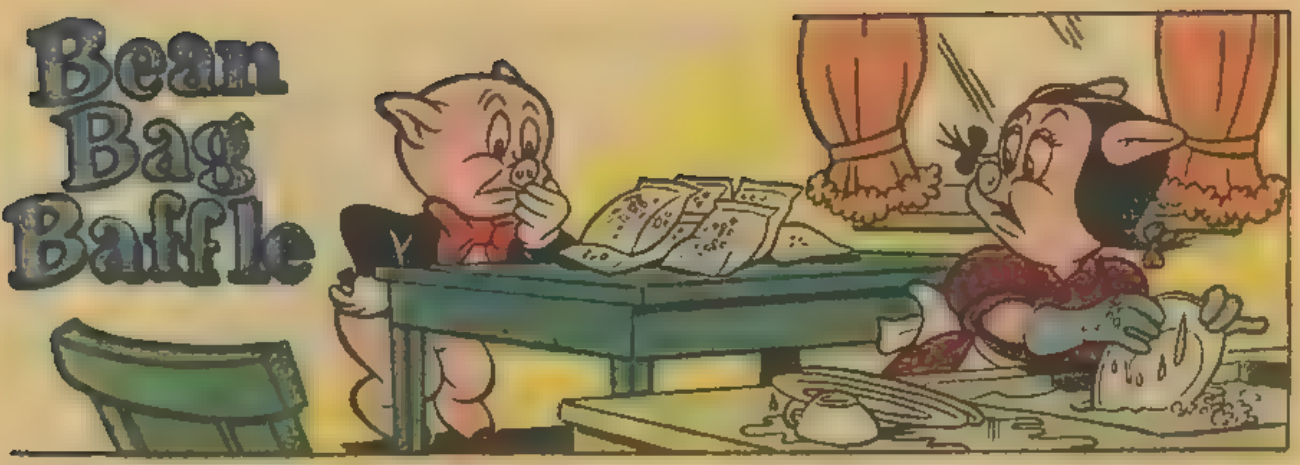
Bean Bag Baffle



Petunia was washing the breakfast dishes when the kitchen door flew open and Porky rushed in. His arms were loaded with bags of navy beans. He hurried to the table and dropped his bundles with a sigh. "Whew! I didn't know that beans weighed so much," he panted, mopping his perspiring brow.

"Porky Pig! What on earth are you going to do with all those beans?" Petunia gasped. "That's enough to feed an army."

"I'm not going to eat them," Porky laughed, "just count them. They are for a contest I'm going to enter. The sporting goods store is giving away a fishing pole to the person who can guess the correct number of beans in a two-quart jar," Porky explained. "I stopped by to see if you had a jar that size so I can put the beans into it as I count."

"There might be one out in the garage, Porky," Petunia answered. "If you can find one you are welcome to it, but I'm afraid the garage is in a terrible mess," she apologized.

"That's all right, I'll find it if it's there. You wouldn't like to help me count, would you?" Porky asked as he was leaving.

"Oh, Porky, I'm sorry. I just don't have the time. I've got to clean out all my kitchen cupboards. See you later," she waved.

When Petunia had dried the last dish and put it away she tackled the big job of cleaning she had planned. "I'll start here, first," she decided. So she began taking pots, pans, and lids out of the cupboard. "I wonder what that can be, way back in the corner? Why it's my bean pot. I'd forgotten I had one."

Petunia took it out and dusted it off. Then she noticed some small printing on the bottom of the pot. "Two-quart size," she read. "That's what Porky was looking for." Petunia hurried out to the garage with it in her hand.

"Porky! Oh, Porky!" she called. "I've found a perfect two-quart pot for you to use. Oh, dear. He's gone," she sighed, looking around at the garage with its neat shelves and spotless floor. "What a wonderful surprise! Porky cleaned everything in sight while he was looking for the jar. But now what will I do with this bean pot?" she wondered, walking slowly back to the house. "I know," she brightened. "I'll use it myself!"

It was late that same afternoon, and Petunia had finished all her chores, when Porky returned to tell her the sad news. "Well, I didn't win the contest, after all," he said with a long face.

Petunia smiled, "Cheer up, Porky. I have a surprise for you." And she led him into the kitchen. "I've cooked your favorite dish for supper," she announced.

"Oh, boy! Baked beans!" he grinned.

"And here is another surprise," Petunia said, handing him a brand-new fishing pole.

"A new fishing pole! For me? I don't understand," he said in a puzzled voice.

"I won it in that contest at the sporting goods store. I want you to have the prize for cleaning out my garage," she replied.

"I still don't understand. How did you do it? My guess wasn't anywhere near the right number. You sure are smart."

"Not really. You see, after you had gone, I found my bean pot, and it is exactly the same size as the one they used in the contest," she explained. "Naturally, I know how many bags of beans my own pot holds. All I had to do was count the number of beans in one small bag, then multiply that by the number of bags the pot holds. You might say that I had the contest in the bag from the very beginning," she laughed.

Kraft Fudgies (both kinds - Chocolate and Vanilla)

They're Toot-Toot-Too-rific! — Kraft Fudgies! Creamy smooth and just busting with energy. In bars of six, or ask mom to buy you the big bag—you get a lot of candy for your money either way!
